

Edge, Dexter, and Catherine Sprague. 2019. "A performance by Wolfgang and Nannerl Mozart in Calais (4 Aug 1765)." In: Mozart: New Documents, edited by Dexter Edge and David Black. First published 25 Feb 2019. [direct link]

A performance by Wolfgang and Nannerl Mozart in Calais (4 Aug 1765)

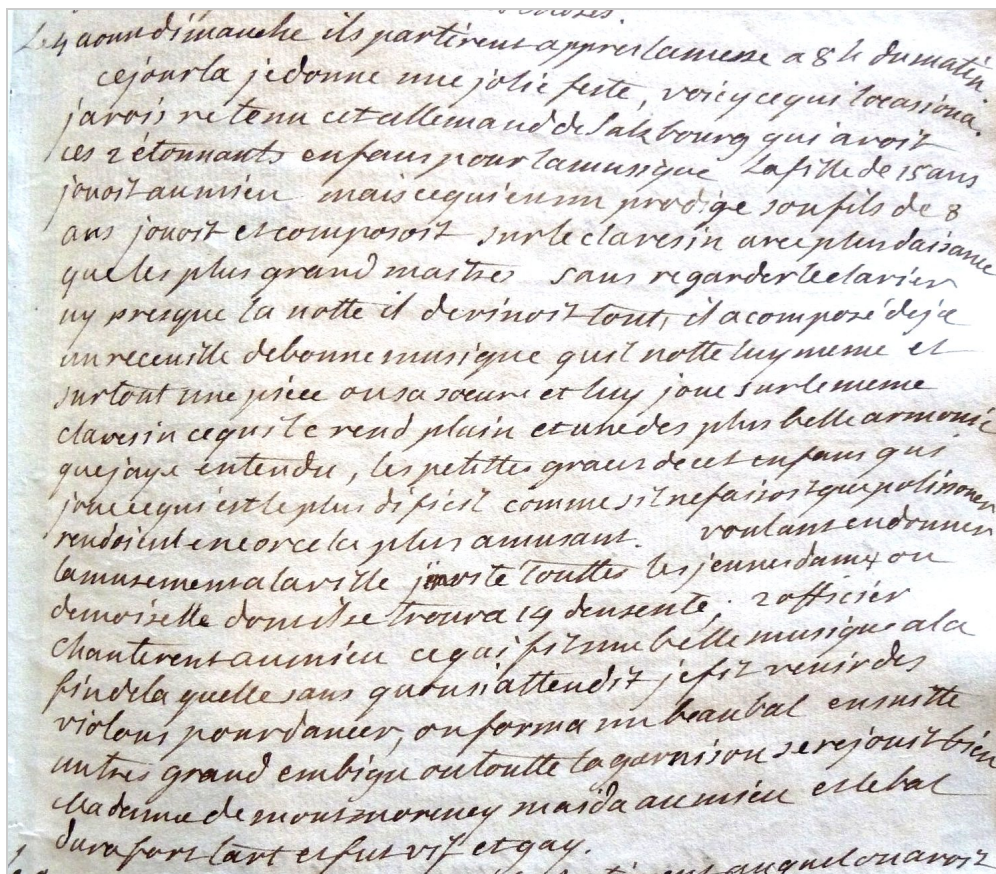

Dexter Edge and Catherine Sprague

Emmanuel de Croÿ-Solre, Mémoires de ma vie (Paris, Institut de France, Ms 1640-168041, t. XXI, fol. 31)

Le 4 aout [1765] dimanche [...]

ce jour la je donne une jolie feste, voicy ce qui l'ocasiona.
j'avois retenu cet allemand de Salzbourg qui avoit ces 2 étonnants enfans pour la musique[.] La fille de 15 ans jouoit au mieu mais ce qui est un prodige son fils de 8 ans jouoit et composoit sur le clavesin avec plus d'aisance que les plus grand maitres sans regarder le clavier ny presque la notte il devinoit tout, il a composé deja un recueil de bonne musique qu'il notte luy meme et surtout une piece ou sa sœur et luy joue sur le meme clavesin ce qui le rend plain et une des plus belle harmonie que j'aye entendu, les petites graces de cet enfans qui joue ce qui est le plus difcil comme s'il ne faisoit que polissoner rendoient encor cela plus amusant. voulant en donner l'amusement a la ville j'invite toutes les jeunes dames ou demoiselle dont il se trouva 14 densente; 2 officier chanterent au mieu ce qui fit une belle musique a la fin de la quelle sans qu'on si attendit je fit venir des violons pour dancier, on forma un beau bal ensuite un tres grand embigu ou toute la garnison se rejouit bien Madama de montmorency m'aida au mieu et le bal dura fort tart et fut vif et gay.

Le 4^e aoust dimanche ils partirent appres le dîner a 8 h du matin ce jour la j'ay donne une jolie feste, voici ce qui tocasina.
j'ay eu retenu cet allemand de Salzbourg qui avoit ces 2 étonnans enfans pour la musique. La fille de 15 ans jouoit au clavecin mais ce qui en un prodige son fils de 8 ans jouoit et composoit sur le clavecin avec plus d'aisance que les plus grand maitres sans regarder le clavier ny presque la note il devoit tout, il a composé déjà un recueil de bonne musique qu'il note luy meme et surtout une piece ou sa soeur et luy joue sur le meme clavecin ce qui se read plain et une des plus belle harmonie que j'ay entendu, les petites graces de cet enfans qui joue ce qui est le plus difficile comme si ne faisoit que poliment rendoit encore les plus amusans. voulans endormir l'amusement a la ville j'ay te toutes les jeunes dames ou demoiselle domstee trouva 14 deusente, 2 officiers chantèrent au clavecin ce qui fit une belle musique a la fin de la quelle sans qu'on s'attendit j'ay fait venir des violons pour danser, on forma un branle en suite autres grand embuque ou toute la garnison se rejoist bien chaque de nous moiney mais a au clavecin et le bal dura fort tart et fus vif et gay.

[translation:]

August 4 [1765], Sunday [...]

That same day I gave a nice party. This is how it came about. For the music I had engaged this German from Salzburg, who has two remarkable children. The 15-year-old daughter played excellently but the real prodigy was his 8-year-old son, who played and composed on the harpsichord with more ease than the greatest masters, without looking at the keyboard and hardly ever at the notes; he anticipated everything. He has already composed a collection of good music that he notated himself, and especially a piece in which his sister and he play on the same harpsichord, which produces a full sound and one of the most beautiful harmonies I have ever heard. The little graces of this child, who played the most difficult things as if he were just cutting capers, made all this even more entertaining. Wishing to share the entertainment with the town, I invited all the young ladies, married and unmarried, 14 of whom were dancing; 2 officers sang excellently, which made for some nice music, at the end of which, without anyone expecting it, I sent for violins for dancing; we had a nice ball, followed by a very large supper where the entire company amused themselves. Madame de Montmorency assisted me diligently and the ball lasted till late and was lively and enjoyable.

[translation by Kris Steyaert]

Commentary

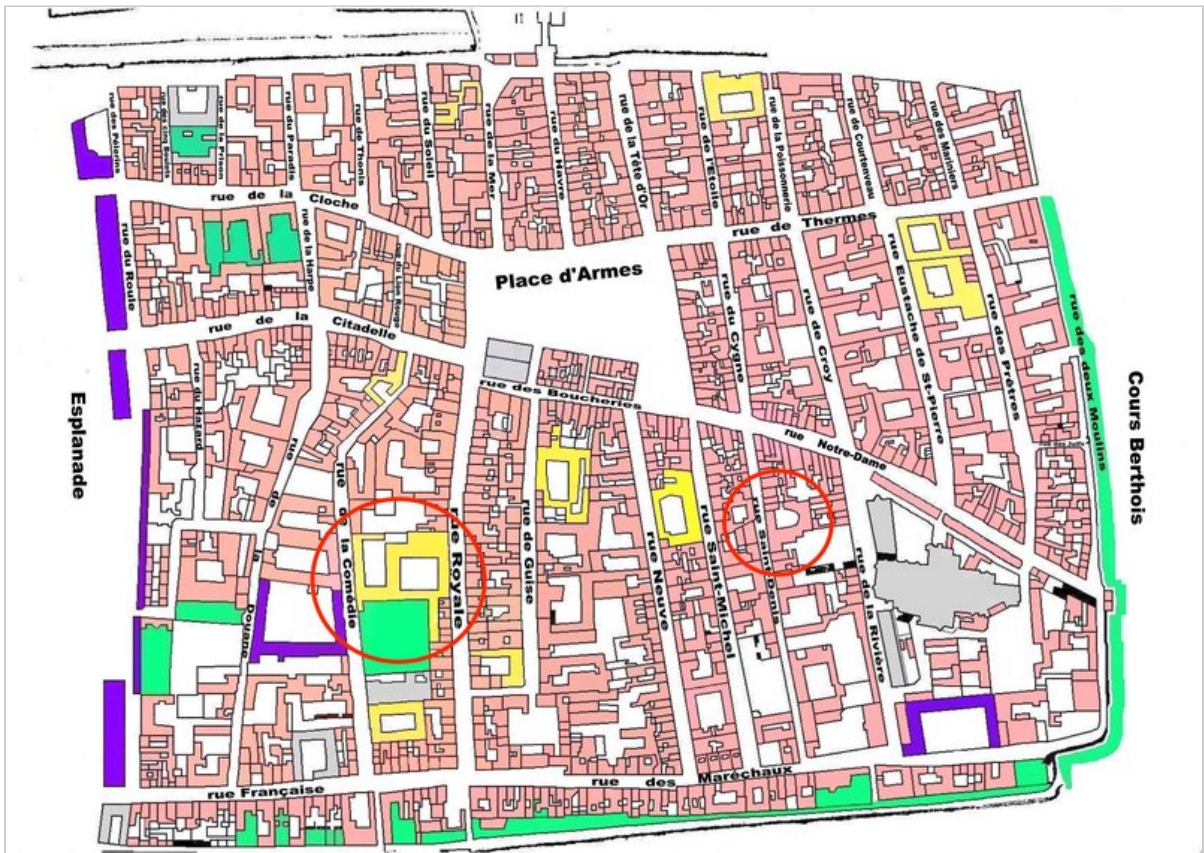

The Mozart family left London on 24 Jul 1765, after a stay of fifteen months. Following a brief stop in Canterbury (where they may have given a concert, although this remains uncertain), they spent several days at Bourne Place in nearby Bishopsbourne. Leopold's original intention had been to return to Paris, but the Dutch envoy in London had followed them to Canterbury with a special request from Princess Carolina, sister of William V, Prince of Orange, the stadtholder of the Dutch Republic. The princess, who was eight months pregnant, very much wished to hear the Mozart children, whose fame was now widespread (see our entry for 18 Sep 1765). Leopold felt obliged to accede to her request, "als sie wissen" (he wrote to Lorenz Hagenauer) "daß man einer Schwangeren Frauen nichts abschlagen solle" ("as you know that one should not refuse a pregnant woman anything"; Briefe, i:201). On 1 Aug the Mozarts made the trip across the English Channel from Dover to Calais, intending to head northeast from there towards The Hague.

The Mozarts' itinerary between 1 Aug and 11 Sep 1765 is poorly documented. Leopold sent no letters to Hagenauer between 9 Jul (his last from London) and 19 Sep (his first from The Hague). In his letter of 19 Sep 1765 he gives only a highly compressed account of the interval between their arrival in Calais and their arrival in Lille (where they stayed for around four weeks because Wolfgang had a bad cold and Leopold suffered a period of dizzy spells and vomiting), and he gives no precise dates at all for the six weeks between their arrival in Calais and their arrival in The Hague. Until recently, no other documents were known bearing on this portion of the Mozarts' European tour.

Two documents have recently come to light that fill some of the gaps in our knowledge. One newly discovered item is an inscription on the back of an exemplar of the famous Delafosse engraving of the Mozarts, based on Carmontelle's equally famous watercolor portrait (on the engraving and watercolor see our entry for 21 Jan 1765). The inscription places the Mozarts in Dunkirk on 9 and 10 Aug 1765, several days later than previously thought (see our entry on the inscription). The other new item, transcribed here, is an entry in the manuscript diary of Emmanuel de Croÿ-Solre, Duc de Croÿ (1718–1784): Croÿ writes that the Mozart children—he does not identify them by name, but the identification is beyond doubt—performed at a party he held in Calais on Sun, 4 Aug 1765. The significance of Croÿ's diary entry for Mozart scholarship was first recognized by Catherine Sprague, and Cliff Eisen published an article about it in the Mozart-Jahrbuch 2014 (Eisen 2015).

The Mozarts arrived in Calais on Thu, 1 Aug 1765. Leopold's travel notes show that they lodged at the Hôtel d'Angleterre, managed by Pierre Dessin (Briefe, i:196; Schurig 1920, 30). Dessin had formerly run the "Lion d'Argent" in Calais, but that hotel was destroyed by fire in the night of 24–25 Sep 1764 (Demotier 1856, 283), and he quickly re-established himself in the Hôtel d'Angleterre, a large complex in the Rue Royale. Dessin was soon to become famous in his own right from Laurence Sterne's depiction of him in A Sentimental Journey, published in 1768, based on Sterne's own experience in Calais in 1762 (Sterne 1768, 21 and passim). The Hôtel d'Angleterre long remained the preferred lodging of the many distinguished visitors passing through Calais, including royalty, aristocrats, and such prominent figures as Benjamin Franklin and Thomas Jefferson. An eighteenth-century guide for British travelers writes of the Hôtel d'Angleterre:

[...] But no hotel
in France is equal to that from which I now write. Monsieur Dessin knows the goût of both nations, and blends them with propriety; and he has the advantage of a palace as it were, to do it in.
[Thicknesse 1770, 259]

Philippe Cazez, colored and annotated map based on a cadastral plan of central Calais from 1834
(Archives départementales du Pas-de-Calais, 3 P 193/152)

The Hôtel d'Angleterre is the large yellow building on the Rue Royale. The house belonging to the Marquise d'Alembon, the likely location of Croÿ's party on 4 Aug 1765, may have been the building with the curved inner wing on the east (right-hand) side of Rue Saint-Denis (see below).

Croÿ's manuscript diary, Mémoires de ma vie, consists of 6700 pages in 41 volumes; it is held by the library of the Institut de France. Portions of the diary were published by Grouchy and Cottin in 1906–1907, but that edition does not include the passage referring to the Mozarts. The reference was apparently first published by Dion (1987, 104–105), but was unknown to Mozart scholars until it was uncovered by Sprague.

Emmanuel de Croÿ, Duc de Croÿ, Prince du Saint Empire, de Solre et de Meurs (1718–1784), stemmed from an ancient and illustrious noble family that was said ultimately to trace its roots back to Prince Marc of Hungary, who had settled in France in the twelfth century (see Dictionnaire de la Noblesse 1772, 372ff; see also the article on the House of Croÿ on English Wikipedia). Emmanuel was born on 23 Jun 1718 in Condé-sur-l'Escaut (where Josquin had spent the last years of his life). The Château de l'Ermitage (the Hermitage) in Condé-sur-l'Escaut remained Croÿ's principal and beloved residence throughout his life. Young Croÿ distinguished himself as a military commander during the War of the Austrian Succession (1740–1748), by the end of which he had achieved the rank of maréchal de camp (field marshal). For a portion of the Seven Years' War (1756–1763) he was commander in Artois, Picardie, Calais (Pas-de-Calais), and Boulonnais (Dion 1987, 12), and responsible for the defense of the corresponding portions of the French coast. Croÿ sometimes made his headquarters in Calais in a house belonging to the Marquise d'Alembon, and he played a role in evaluating and renovating the fortifications at Calais, Dunkirk, and other coastal towns under his command (see our entry for 9–10 Aug 1765).

Philippe-Alexis Gobert (attributed), portrait of Emmanuel de Croÿ
(Hôtel de ville, Condé-sur-l'Escaut)

Croÿ's party on 4 Aug 1765 very likely took place in the same house that he had used during the war, and where he continued to stay on his later visits to Calais. Central Calais was largely obliterated in the Second World War, and the location of the house is not entirely certain. However, a nineteenth-century reference work on historical inscriptions in Pas-de-Calais transcribes the text of a plaque on the house at 15 Rue Saint-Denis, at that time (1886) the British consulate in Calais. The plaque is reported to have read:

LE DUC DE CROY
(1718–1784)
LIEUTENANT GÉNÉRAL DES ARMÉES DU ROI
COMMANDANT
DANS LES PROVINCES DE PICARDIE
BOULONNAIS ET PAYS-RECONQUIS
A HABITÉ CETTE MAISON
DE 1762 A 1783

[Épigraphie du Département du Pas-de-Calais, 1886, iii:368]

A footnote to the inscription identifies the house as having belonged to the Marquise d'Alembon (Croÿ himself did not own a house in Calais until near the end of his life). Although this inscription is misleading in its implication that Croÿ lived in the house continuously between 1762 to 1783—after the end of the Seven Years' War, he visited Calais relatively infrequently—it is at present our best evidence of the location of the performance by the Mozart children in 1765. A Baedeker guide from 1909 confirms that 15 Rue Saint-Denis was indeed the address of the British consulate at that time (Baedeker 1909, 3). The house in question may have been the one shown in the map above on the right (east) side of Rue Saint-Denis with the elegantly curved inner wing. It can be seen below in an aerial photograph from 1935.

Walter Mittelhozer, aerial photograph (1935, detail) showing the house in which Croÿ's party may have taken place in 1765 (curved structure, lower left).

The Église Notre-Dame de Calais (which still exists) is at right.
(ETH zürich e-pics, LBS_MH05-62-08)

The party on 4 Aug 1765 was not the only one that Croÿ gave in Calais. The Gazette de France reported, for example, that Croÿ had given a magnificent dinner on 7 Sep 1762 for the Duc de Nivernois and the Duke of Bedford, whose paths crossed in Calais as they were traveling to London and Paris respectively to negotiate a treaty ending the war between France and Britain:

De Calais, le 8 Septembre 1762.

Le Duc de Nivernois est arrivé le 6 en cette Ville, & a reçu les honneurs qu'on rend ordinairement aux Ambassadeurs du Roi. Le Duc de Bedford y est débarqué le lendemain 7, & a reçu les mêmes honneurs. Le Prince de Croÿ, qui commande ici, a donné à dîner aux deux Plénipotentiaires, & les a traités avec la plus grande magnificence. Le Duc de Bedford a pris aujourd'hui la route de Paris; & le Duc de Nivernois doit s'embarquer ce soir sur le Yacht de Sa Majesté Britannique, pour passer en Angleterre.

[Gazette de France, no. 74, 13 Sep 1762]

From Calais, 8 September 1762.

The Duc de Nivernois arrived in this city on the 6th and received the honors that are ordinarily given to the ambassadors of the King. The Duke of Bedford landed here the next day, the 7th, and received the same honors. The Prince de Croÿ, who is the commander here, gave a dinner for the two plenipotentiaries, and treated them with the greatest magnificence. The Duke of Bedford set out today for Paris, and the Duc de Nivernois plans to embark this evening to go to England on the yacht of His British Majesty.

Croÿ also seems to have made a point of expressing his gratitude to his soldiers and to the general population of Calais by holding parties and dinners for them. This good-natured noblesse oblige is evident in his description of the ball that he held at the end of his party on 4 Aug 1764.

On 18 Feb 1741 Croÿ married Angélique-Adélaïde d'Harcourt, with whom he had two children who survived to adulthood. His wife died on 7 Sep 1744, and Croÿ never remarried, which may help explain the role that Duchesse Louise-Françoise-Pauline de Montmorency-Luxembourg (1734–1818) appears to have played in assisting Croÿ with the organization and hosting of his party in 1765. The Duchesse de Montmorency is listed in Leopold Mozart's travel notes immediately before Croÿ (Briefe, i:196; Schurig 1920, 39), and he mentions the two in the same sentence in his letter to Hagenauer on 19 Sep 1765 (Briefe, i:201).

Croÿ refers to the Mozart children playing a piece that Wolfgang had written for keyboard four-hands. Eisen (2015, 167ff) speculates on the implication of this passage for the question of the authenticity of the sonata K. 19d and the divertimento in C major, K. deest, but concludes that the matter remains unresolved.

Croÿ gives the ages of Wolfgang and Nannerl 8 and 15; they were actually 9 and 14 at the time of Croÿ's party.

We now know that the Mozarts were in Calais from 1 to 4 Aug 1765, but we still do not know exactly when they left Calais on the next leg of their journey. The newly discovered inscription on an exemplar of the Delafosse print places them in Dunkirk on 9 and 10 Aug. Dunkirk is around 40 km from Calais by road, and the trip would likely have been made within just one day. Thus the newly discovered dates for the Mozarts' stay in Dunkirk suggest that they may have remained in Calais until as late as 8 Aug. If this is correct, then they spent a week in a town where at one time they were thought to have remained only overnight (see, for example, Briefe, commentary to Leopold’s travel notes, v:140).

Notes (↑)

So far as we know, Croÿ’s diary entry referring to the Mozarts was first published by Dion (1987, 104–105). Dion gives only a portion of Croÿ’s entry for 4 Aug 1765, omitting the date and the opening sentence—“ce jour la je donne une jolie feste, voicy ce qui l’ocasiona”—and the opening words of the following sentence, “j’avois retenu.” Also omitted are the passages from “les petites graces” up to and including “une belle musique” and from “ensuite un tres grand embigu” to the end. Eisen gives a transcription of the entire entry, but does not translate the portion given in blue above, about the ball after the Mozarts’ performance. Our transcription matches Eisen’s in all but a few minor details.

Pierre Dessin (1726–1793) was born Pierre de Quillacq in Castets in Aquitaine; for a family tree and a helpful history of the Dessin hotels in Calais, see Caulier. For more on Louise-Françoise-Pauline de Montmorency-Luxembourg, see Braham 1980, 171–72.

We are tremendously grateful to Kris Steyaert for his translation of Croÿ’s diary entry and his help with the transcription, and to Philippe Cassez for providing his map of Calais, for suggesting which house may have been associated with Croÿ, and for his generous and quick responses to numerous questions. We would also like to thank Sylvie Lefebvre of the Archives départementales du Pas-de-Calais for information about the 834 cadastral map of Calais; and Les Amis du Vieux Calais for pointing us to the aerial photographs.

Bibliography (↑)

Baedeker, Karl. 1909. Northern France from Belgium and the English Channel to the Loire, excluding Paris and Its Environs: Handbook for Travellers. 5th ed. Leipzig: Karl Baedeker.

Bertrand, Raymond de. 1865. Le Port et le commerce maritime de Dunkerque au xviiiè siècle. Dunkirk: Veuve Benjamin Kien.

Braham, Allan. 1980. The Architecture of the French Enlightenment. Berkeley and Los Angeles: University of California Press.

Caulier, Daniel. [n.d.] “Pierre DE QUILLACQ Antoine DESSIN,” on Geneanet. Most recently accessed 3 Feb 2019.

Delcourt, André. 1984. Un Grand Seigneur au siècle des lumières. Le Duc de Croÿ, Marechal de France (1718–1784). Tournai: L’École d’imprimerie Don Bosco.

Demotier, Charles. 1856. Annales de Calais, depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu’à nos jours. Calais: Demotier.

Dictionnaire de la noblesse. 1772. 2nd ed., vol. 5. Paris: La Veuve Duchesne.

Dion, Marie-Pierre. 1987. Emmanuel de Croy (1718–1784): Itinéraire intellectuel et réussite nobiliaire au siècle des Lumières. Editions de l'Université de Bruxelles. [pdf]

Eisen, Cliff. 2015. "Mozart at Calais: A New Document and Its Implications for the Family Travels and Mozart's Compositions for Keyboard Four-Hands." Mozart-Jahrbuch 2014, 161–72. Kassel: Bärenreiter.

Épigraphie du Département du Pas-de-Calais. 1886. Published by the Commission départementale des Monuments historiques. Vol. 3. Arras: Typographie de Sède et Cie.

Grouchy, Vicomte de, and Paul Cottin. 1906. Journal inédit de duc de Croÿ (1718–1784), publié, d'après le manuscrit autographe conservé à la Bibliothèque de l'Institut. Paris: Ernest Fammariion. [Hathi; the volumes are also available on Google Books]

Hennebelle, David. 2001. "Une Tournée de musiciens au xviii^e siècle. La famille Mozart en Europe du Nord-Ouest (1763–1766)." Revue du Nord (2001/4), no. 342, 753–75.

Schurig, Arthur. 1920. Leopold Mozart Reise-Aufzeichnungen 1763–1771. 27 faksimilierte Blätter. Dresden: Oscar Laube. [Hathi]

Sprague, Catherine. [forthcoming]. Mozart, the Salzburg Years, 1756-1781: Images and Insights. Hillsdale, N. Y.: Pendragon.

Sterne, Laurence. 1768. A Sentimental Journey through France and Italy. By Mr. Yorick. Vol. 1. London: T. Becket and P. A. De Hondt.

Thicknesse, Philip. 1770. Useful Hints to Those Who Make the Tour of France, in a Series of Letters Written from that Kingdom. 2nd ed. London: G. Kearsly.

Credit: Catherine Sprague

Authors: Dexter Edge, Catherine Sprague

Link(s): NA

Search Term: NA

Source Library: Paris, Institut de France, Ms 1640-168041, t. XXI, fol. 31

Categories: Biography

First Published: Mon, 25 Feb 2019

Citation:

Edge, Dexter, and Catherine Sprague. 2019. "A performance by Wolfgang and Nannerl Mozart in Calais (4 Aug 1765)." In: Mozart: New Documents, edited by Dexter Edge and David Black. First published 25 Feb 2019. [direct link]