Three Sonatas for Harpsichord or Pianoforte composed by Sig. Muzio Clementi

Among the many newer composers for the fortepiano, Clementi has already long since especially distinguished himself, not only because his pieces show more richness, taste, and knowledge of his instrument than one usually finds in keyboard pieces, but he has also been able to make his own an entirely individual style that laudably distinguishes him from the baggage-train of imitators. His style has nothing similar to either a Bach or Haydn, to either a Mozart or Kozeluch, to either a Sterkel or Vanhal; rather he stands completely independent, by himself. [...]

Commentary

The publication reviewed here is Artaria's edition of three piano sonatas by Muzio Clementi, corresponding to opus 23 in Alan Tyson's catalog of Clementi's works (1967, 61). The set consists of solo sonatas in E-flat major, F major, and E-flat major. Tyson takes the opus number from Longman & Broderip's English edition of the three sonatas, whereas Artaria's title page identifies them as opus 24.

The title page of Artaria's edition of Clementi's "op. 24" (Tyson op. 23)
(Herzogin Anna Amalia Bibliothek, Weimar)

Artaria's edition, which carries the plate number 278, was first advertised in the Wiener Zeitung on 21 Mar 1789 (Weinmann 1985, 26). The same advertisement offers Mozart's German Dances, K. 536 and K. 567, the Minuets, K. 568 and two songs (called "deutsche Arien" in the advertisement), "Abendempfindung," K. 523, and "An Chloe," K. 524. (The Mozart items from Artaria's advertisement are transcribed in Dokumente, 295.)

(ANNO)

The author of the review transcribed above is Friedrich Ludwig Æmilius Kunzen, co-founder of Musikalisches Wochenblatt with Carl Spazier (on the Wochenblatt, see our entry for 10 Oct 1791). Kunzen's review of Clementi's sonatas occupies an entire two-column page in the Wochenblatt, and is of considerable interest in its own right. Here, however, we focus on his reference to Mozart as one of six prominent keyboard composers of the time whose styles Clementi is not imitating. The other five composers besides Mozart mentioned in the review are:

- Bach (presumably Carl Philipp Emanuel Bach)
- Joseph Haydn
- Leopold Kozeluch
- Johann Franz Xaver Sterkel
- Johann Baptist Vanhal

Notes (↑)

So far as we know, this reference to Mozart in Musikalisches Wochenblatt was first published by Schwob (2015, 180–81). Schwob gives a slightly longer extract than we do here, but his is still incomplete. Schwob does not identify the Clementi edition discussed in the review.

In the introduction to his catalog of Clementi’s works, Tyson writes:

The growing popularity of Clementi’s music on the continent meant that a large number of editions appeared in Paris, Vienna and elsewhere. Since there is nothing to show that such editions were anything but Nachdrucke, copied directly (or indirectly) from the English ones, they are not included in the Catalogue. In particular Artaria of Vienna—who had a business relationship with Longman & Broderip in London—published a long series of Clementi editions; some of these have hitherto been held to be first editions but it seems in every case that they are in fact later than the London ones, and are copied from them.
[Tyson 1967, 19–20]

Longman & Broderip’s edition of the three sonatas op. 23 (corresponding to Artaria’s op. 24) was entered at Stationer’s Hall in London on 1 Jan 1790 (see Tyson 1767, 61), more than nine months after Artaria’s first advertisement. So based on this evidence, there is reason to wonder whether Tyson’s generalization about Longman & Broderip’s priority might be mistaken in this case

We are grateful to Janet Page for her comments on a draft of this entry.
